

Head In The Clouds

Views Through My Windows
Celia L Cockburn

Despite my otherwise practical, very on the ground nature, my head often is in the clouds. Decades before I watched the Shard's construction and it became a part of my landscape, I gazed south and east. Large and high buildings block 75 percent of my view, but oh, the clouds! Gone are curtains from my lounge; my focus often is out and upwards. Optical zooming increased the photographic possibilities.

The photographs I have shared here are a tiny portion of my focus not on 'in the clouds' woolliness, but on the amazing beauty of cloudscapes. Sometimes extremely subtle, at others outrageously vibrant... no need to increase saturation. During Covid-19 lockdowns these tendencies undoubtedly have enabled me to spend some time in the clouds, when I could not do more on the ground.
